Gaining Professional Experiences Across the United States: A Summary of University of Nebraska-Lincoln Turf Internships 2012-14

Internships are a key component of a student’s academic program at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln. They allow students to explore different areas of turfgrass management, make connections with future employers, learn about warm- and cool-season turfgrasses under different growing conditions, and experience a professional work environment. Two internships are required as part of each student’s academic program, and students are strongly encouraged to have at least one of these internships at an out-of-state facility. From 2012-14, 45 students completed 67 turf internships for academic credit in 25 different states. The images below represent each location where a student completed an internship. For locations with multiple interns over the three years, the number of students who interned at that location is listed in parentheses after the facility name.
